The Difference Between Work and Play

Two words can be used to describe everything that humans do. These words are work and play. But what is the difference between working and playing? The answer is simple. When someone is enjoying what they are doing, then they are playing. If someone is not enjoying what they are doing, then they are working.

That means that people always have the choice to either work or play. When someone chooses to enjoy their occupation, they are playing. Sadly, work has become a word used to describe someone's job. This is sad because it is evidence that a lot of people do not enjoy the job that they spend the majority of their life doing. If people would just rethink the way that they thought about their job, then they could become more satisfied with their life. A positive mindset can help a person act better towards others and be more fulfilled themselves.

However, it is okay to work sometimes. Not enjoying what is going on can often bring about change in someone's life. This change can positively effect the person making the change, other people, and the environment. For example, if someone is a worker for a company that pollutes the air, and realizes that it is a problem, then they can only bring about change if they do not enjoy polluting the air. Working is the driving force that causes the change to be made. Thus, working can be important too.

It is important to be aware of whether or not playing or working is taking place. This awareness can help make someone happier with their life or it can bring about change. Therefore, Working and playing both play important roles in the way society perceives itself.
