Reconstructing masculinities

Recouperating the masculine

Canadian Journal of Philosophy

Department of Philosophy, University of South Carolina

Review Essay by Christine James

Reconstructing Masculinity

15

14
Recognizing Masculinity

The assumption is made that women are inferior and are to be treated as such. The idea of women being objects or possessions is reinforced through societal norms and expectations. Women are often seen as men's property and are expected to submit to men's authority. This reinforces the patriarchal structure of society, where men hold power and control over women. Women's experiences of discrimination and oppression are often dismissed or ignored, as they are seen as irrelevant or insignificant.

In many cultures, women are expected to conform to strict gender roles and are prevented from pursuing careers or education. This further reinforces the idea that women are inferior to men and are not capable of achieving the same levels of success as men. Women are often subjected to violence and abuse, and their voices are silenced, making it difficult for them to speak out against their oppressors.

The consequences of women's oppression are far-reaching. Women's lack of power and control over their own lives leads to a variety of problems, including poor health outcomes, low self-esteem, and a lack of agency in their lives. Women are often forced into situations they don't want to be in, such as child marriage or domestic abuse.

In conclusion, women's oppression is a significant problem that must be addressed. It is not only an issue of women's rights, but also of human rights. Women deserve to be treated with respect and dignity, and their voices must be heard. It is imperative that we work towards creating a society where women are valued and respected, where they are free to make their own choices, and where they have the power to control their own lives.
and strengthens other exciting possibilities for a new vision of masculinity.

This may appear in the form of new styles of clothing, with traditional ideas of masculinity being challenged. New styles of clothing can be seen as an extension of the self, with an emphasis on self-expression and individuality. This may also be reflected in the choice of accessories, such as jewelry or hats, which can add a personal touch to the overall appearance. In this way, clothing can become a tool for self-expression, allowing individuals to redefine the boundaries of what is considered "masculine."

...