

with a reason for action. There must be, according to Parfit, objective mind-independent reasons to act in certain ways for anything to matter at all, hence the title of the book. Practical rationality requires true beliefs regarding moral reasons: it is not sufficient to be well-informed or consistent to be rational. Rationality in the fullest sense requires knowing right from wrong.

The second book in On What Matters, and the longest, is an expanded version of lectures given by Parfit in 2002, along with comments on these lectures by Barbara Herman, T.M. Scanlon, Susan Wolf, and Allen Wood, and Parfit's response to these comments. This section of the book contains an extended exegesis of the moral philosophy of Immanuel Kant and Parfit's own fullest discussion of ethical theory in print. The most striking and original thesis within On What Matters is the claim that Kantian moral theory converges with T.M. Scanlon's theory from his masterpiece What We Owe to Each Other and, more surprisingly, with a form of utilitarianism. This convergence is achieved through Parfit's reworking of the ideas of Kant and Scanlon. As the commentators on Parfit's lecture argue, the success of the claimed convergence between these moral theories rests somewhat uneasily on the correctness of Parfit's reconstructions.

The third book is an account of the nature of moral facts and a critique of alternatives to this account. Parfit argues for a version of moral realism that holds that there are moral beliefs; moral beliefs are true in virtue of moral facts; moral facts are not natural facts that can be discovered using empirical methods; yet there is nothing metaphysically mysterious about such facts. Many thinkers in metaethics have been skeptical that such a combination of views could be plausible. Parfit defends his own view through his criticism of recent naturalist, expressivist, and constructivist accounts in metaethics.

In a way reminiscent of his view of reasons, Parfit claims that views other than his own cannot explain why anything matters at all, contending that naturalism, expressivism, and constructivism are roads to moral nihilism. This claim is dubious. For example, Parfit's critique of the expressivism of Allan Gibbard unfairly reads Gibbard's view as an account of normative reasons and moral 'ought.' As Gibbard stresses, his account is only meant to explain our concepts of reason and 'ought.' While this might not be satisfying to Parfit, the reading of Gibbard, to be fair, should acknowledge this fact.

The elaboration and defense of metaethical moral realism, 357 pages in total, can be read on its own and should be of great interest to students and scholars of metaethics.

The fourth and final book within On What Matters is a collection of recent essays by Parfit, covering subjects ranging from the interpretation of Kant's philosophy to the question of why the universe exists.

On What Matters is already required reading for researchers and graduate students in the fields of ethical theory and metaethics. Undergraduates and casual readers will find sections of the book related to their own concerns and interests well worth reading. What is perhaps most impressive and inspiring about On What Matters is how, in an era of narrow specialization, Derek Parfit presents an original, wide-ranging, systematic work of great importance.

© 2012 Fritz J. McDonald

Fritz J. McDonald is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan. He works in metaethics, moral theory, metaphysics, and philosophy of language. His publications include "Agency and Responsibility" in The Journal of Value Inquiry and "A Deflationary Metaphysics of Morality" in Acta Analytica.

Self-Help
Sexuality
Wellness and Complementary Medicine

Understanding schizophrenia
is the first step
to acceptance

Learn more
today

understanding schizophrenia
whole.®

Share
Like 0
Tweet 0

Welcome to MHN's unique book review site Metapsychology. We feature over 6600 in-depth reviews of a wide range of books and DVDs written by our reviewers from many backgrounds and perspectives. We update our front page weekly and add more than thirty new reviews each month. Our editor is Christian Perring, PhD. To contact him, use the form available here.

Can't remember our URL? Access our reviews directly via

E-mail: mcaona14@oakland.edu

Website: <http://www2.oakland.edu/phil/faculty.cfm?ID=5745>

'metapsychology.net'

Metapsychology Online
reviewers normally
receive gratis review
copies of the items they review.

Metapsychology Online
receives a commission
from Amazon.com for purchases through this site, which helps us send review copies to reviewers. Please support us by making your Amazon.com
purchases through
our Amazon links. We thank you for your support!

Join our e-mail list!: Metapsychology New Review

Announcements: Sent out monthly, these announcements list our recent reviews. To subscribe, click here.

Interested in becoming a book
reviewer for Metapsychology?
Currently, we especially need
thoughtful reviewers
for books in fiction,
self-help and popular
psychology. To apply,
write to our editor.

Metapsychology
Online Reviews

Promote your
Page too

*Metapsychology Online
Reviews*
ISSN 1931-5716

Follow @metapsych