ପ୍ରାଚୀଦିଲ୍ଲିପ ପ୍ରମାଣେ

This article deals with the development of the concept of the self in the writings of Karl Jaspers—first in his early writings in psychiatry through his philosophical writings in which he consolidated his philosophy of Existenz. Using a phenomenological method, the article traces the development of the idea of the self and expatiates the modifications that occurred in it. Central to the suggested interpretation is the contention that there is an affinity between the understanding of subjectivity that underlay Jaspers' early writings and his idea of Existenz, that was consolidated later in his philosophical writings. The article shows that Jaspers' mature concept of the self as developed in his philosophical writings can be seen also as a way out of the problematic that characterized his early writings, first and foremost the problem of solipsism.
