NORMAN MOORADIAN, PhD, has had a dual career working as an academic focusing on information ethics and as an information management professional. He has worked in the information technology field for close to twenty years in the area of enterprise content management (ECM). Mooradian received PhD and MA degrees in philosophy from Ohio State University, and he has completed graduate courses in legal studies at the University of Illinois, Springfield. He has researched and published on issues in information technology ethics and business ethics. He has also taught ethics, business ethics, and logic and critical thinking at various colleges and universities over the last two decades. Mooradian is currently a senior solutions analyst in Konica Minolta's ECM Division, where his responsibilities include business analysis, systems architecture, documentation, and education.
