

Table of Contents

Abstract
Abbreviations of primary references
Introduction
Ch. 1 The Rationale of Wittgenstein's Concern with Phenomenology
1.1 Colour-Exclusion and Ramsey's review of the Tractatus
1.1.1 A Tractarian background.....
1.1.2 Induction and forecast.....
1.1.3 Analysis: logical and physical.....
1.2 Contradiction and exclusion in "Some Remarks on Logical Form"
1.2.1 Ascriptions of colour degree are un-analyzabile
1.2.2 The logical product of colour ascriptions is logically un-foreseeable.....
1.2.3 Further logical operations with colour ascriptions are logically un- foreseeable.....
1.3 Schlick on colour-exclusion and phenomenology
1.3.1 Schlick's forecast on philosophy to come
1.3.2 The dismissal of the possibility of the material a priori
1.4 Two replies to Schlick.....
1.4.1 A mid-Wittgensteinian reply
1.4.2 Middle Wittgenstein's reply
1.5 Phenomenology: a logic or a logic's application?
1.5.1 A Tractarian appeal
1.5.2 Logical syntax reconsidered
1.5.3 The logic of form and the logic of content.....

Ch. 2 The Conception of Phenomenological Language.....
2.1 Ordinary language disguises logical structure.....
2.1.1 Ordinary syntax and philosophical nonsense
2.1.2 The two-plane analogy.....
2.1.3 The need of a symbolism for deep syntax.....
2.1.4 When does symbolism involve numbers?.....
2.1.5 Completeness and logical multiplicity.....
2.2 Ordinary propositions as hypothesis-laden descriptions.....
2.2.1 Physikalische Sprache and its characterization as hypothetical
2.2.2 Hypothesis as multifaceted grammatical structure
2.2.3 The sense and the truth of a hypothesis
2.2.4 Multifaceted phenomena unified by a hypothesis
2.3 Phenomenological statements as hypothesis-free descriptions.....
2.3.1 The verification of phenomenological statements.....
2.3.2 The restriction to what is verifiable.....
2.3.3 Verification and isolation.....
Ch. 3 The Abandonment of Phenomenological Language.....
3.1 The replacement of phenomenological language.....
3.1.1 A turn to ordinary language.....
3.1.2 Alternatives to phenomenological language
3.1.3 Against a privileged description and its ideal of clarity.....
3.2 Problems for verification.....
3.2.1 Propositions about the past
3.2.1 The rigidity of verification and the multiplicity of language
3.2.3 The aim of ordinary propositions.....

3.3 The critique of the immediate description of immediate experience
3.3.1 Physical time and memory time
3.3.2 Critique of the notion of immediate description
3.3.3 Critique of the notion of immediate experience
Ch. 4 Phenomenological Language and Pain Expressions.....
4.1 Pain expressions in the first person
4.1.1 Mental states and immediate experience.....
4.1.2 Pain expressions and mental states
4.1.3 Specific absence and negative expressions
4.2 Critique of the uniform account of pain expressions.....
4.2.1 The uniform account and its implications.....
4.2.2 The asymmetry of pain expressions.....
4.2.3 Connections with the critique of phenomenological language
Conclusions
Bibliography	